Napoleon!"

It has always been one of the unfathor able mysteries of McClellan's campaign against Richmond, says a cotemporary why, after his army had gained so brilliant and glorious a victory at Malvern Hill, he should have ordered a retreat to Harrison's Landing. Whatever may be said of the previous battles of the campaign there can be no manner of doubt that that of Malvern Hill was a great victory, and hurled destruction upon Lee's army to such an extent as literally to reduce his force to a torn and bleeding mob. More than ten thousand rebels lay on the field dead or dying, whole regiments had been swept away and annihilated by the terrible storm of grape shot and rifle bullets that tore through their ranks. Lee's army was ronted, bleeding, and demoralized, and deeing in terror to the swamps, throwing Mrs. Banning's Cordial for Children away their arms and knapsacks, and ex- Teething, and in all cases where it has that be ought; but the loyal people of this was at this juncture that Gen.
